Today we are going to learn how to winter sow seeds. First you'll need a milk jug or any kind of container, then you are going to put holes on the bottom, then cut it in half but leaving about one or two inches' hinge. Then you are going to poke your finger through the soil and drop two or three seeds per hole. Then cover it up. Then you would like to label your seeds. Today I'm doing Aswad Eggplant. Then you cover it up, put duct tape all the way around, and you are creating a mini greenhouse. You can use any containers you want, like I had this Easter egg container and it already had holes on the bottom. I put a hole on top, but it cracked it a little bit. But that's OK, it doesn't have to be pretty. The thing is you're creating a mini greenhouse, and want this condensation like this. Once you're... and then you leave it outside until it's... and keep an eye on it when it starts to sprout. And then you want to make sure the soil is moist and you can when it's time to transplant you can use a plastic spoon to dig it out. I live in a windy area because I live across a farm field. So I put these in crates. I found this at Dollar Tree for one dollar and see there's holes on the bottom so when it rains and snows on top of it, which is fine, it will create drainage. I did two of these already. And now, the reason why I got into vegetable gardening is because I needed to find something that will dedicate to my daughter that passed away three years ago. She loved vegetable gardening. So I had to learn how to vegetable gardening versus flower gardening. I've always been a flower gardener all my life. So it has helped me with my grieving process, it has helped me go out; out in the sun, out in the yard; be active. It's very important that you find something that you love doing. Happy Gardening!
